As part of their education, children of all ages today undergo meticulous career preparation. In order to help children succeed in life and acquire the important skills for future employment, school systems strive to implement mandated standards. Many creative school programs, like music and art, are often deemed unimportant and dropped from the curriculum because of this worthwhile pursuit. What many institutions don't understand is that music education can positively affect a child's development and growth. Musicworks Canada has emerged at the forefront offering music lessons and preschool music programs that the majority of schools nowadays fail to provide.

Music is apparently the most life-enlightening area of education, an integral component of art education because it is a universal language that ignites creativity and emotional responses in a way that no other language can. There is a string of important advantages that a child receives when they get musical education at a young age. Music lessons help in creating interactive and social skills positively influencing a youngster's academic performance and giving an outlet for innovativeness that is significant to a kid's growth and development. Because it elevates a child's learning to new levels, music education is regarded as an essential component of the educational process.

Music training and lessons improve language abilities in youngsters and stimulate the brain and provide children with a wealth of vocabulary in a short period, thanks to its diverse lyrics and sounds. Music also exposes kids to diverse languages, laying the groundwork for their ability to communicate and comprehend in different languages.

Children who take music lessons have the chance to learn about other cultures as songs from other countries are frequently used in early music education. Additionally, they gain an appreciation for other cultures and start respecting their differences. Music also helps in the development of memory and cognitive skills. It has a way of lingering with us through a variety of sounds and catchy melodies, and when used correctly, music can act as a powerful learning tool.

Musicworks Canada has become a prominent name in the music and educational industry because of preschool music programs, music illustrations, computer-based intelligence-driven math mentoring, and coding programs it provides.

In 2007, Tae Ho Style Hong, more commonly referred to as Taeho Style established Musicworks Canada under the former name The Beat of Music with his father Duheun Hong. He became the sole owner and CEO after he bought out his father in 2014. With its headquarters in Calgary, Alberta, Musicworks Canada under the leadership of Taeho Style aims to provide students with a place where academics and fun were treated equally. Musicworks Canada was established to fill a void in music education. During the coronavirus pandemic, Musicworks Canada's success greatly contributed to the momentum it needed to become a franchise. It soon became the leading and rapidly growing music education franchise in Canada as a result of its quick expansion to Western Canada.

Musicworks Canada's culture, based on standards of integrity, growth, community, relationship, and quality, is one of the main reasons for its success. Its founder took great care to ensure that the model is beneficial to students, teachers, and franchises alike. The organization has a team of skilled experts and educators of music who help students in creating and polish their music skills. All these instructors have extensive experience and certification in their respective areas.

Musicworks Canada teaches people of all ages, from toddlers to seniors, how to play the drums, guitar, brass, ukulele, piano, violin, and woodwind instruments, as well as theory and vocal. The company has developed a preschool program for children of ages 2 to 5. This program was made explicitly for Musicworks Preschool to support kids' mental, social, and physical well-being improvement by using music.

Musicworks Canada provides a comprehensive solution for all aspects of music education including instrument repairs and maintenance, making it more convenient for students and their parents. In addition, it has worked with Sprix Japan to incorporate creative assessments and programs into the existing academic curriculum in order to introduce a new kind of tutoring to Canada. QUREO (Coding), TOFAS (Academic Assessment), DOJO (Math), and i-Tops (Programming Assessment) are among their innovative and dynamic programs. In 2022, Musicworks Canada established the Musicworks Africa Foundation and organized the first student exchange program with South Korea.

It goes without saying that music has always been a part of communities and civilizations as all praises, whether to God, humanity, or even nature, have been written musically. Music is an art through which kids can reap both mental and therapeutic benefits, and the more we delve deeper into music, the more advantages we gain. Musicworks Canada gives music the importance it deserves. Music lessons taught by them have the power and capacity to transform society and its children into great human beings.
